The market yesterday was fully as wild as any of those that have preceded it with alternate periods of great strength and of westeres under realizing, with ar surprised if it should come this afternoon. But as yet there are few that look for a smash, unless something startling in the general news forces it. It seems probable that the ous-priced railways will be allowed to say back a few points, and that on the next advance they will not get quite so high as they are now. The lower priced railway scenrities to which attention has been called in this column will probably be the features next, and may be bought with reasonable safety on reactions of a few points. The industrials too, look well to many market people of experience.
